The way for Governor Ireland ever to be wanted at the front again, is to promptly get out of the way of the people in this senatorial race. The ballots show that the people don't want him in the rear, where he has uniformly stood, defeating their evident preference for Reagan or Maxey.

THE first ballots cast at Austin showed that neither Ireland nor Terrell was the choice of the people, and Terrell withdrew. Not so did Ireland. He is not the desire of the people, but as all his honors have been won by management, he holds on, thwarting the popular desire, that some man who has not dared to ask the people for the office of United States Senator may be elected. Each day that John Ireland obstructs the will of the people digs deeper that political grave into which he is descending. Cold and sel-
